REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT

To the Trustees of Wellesley College:

I have the honor to present the following report for the academic years 1960-1961 through 1963-1964.

Educational Developments

Curricular and Calendar Change. The Report of the President in 1960 noted that a "new seriousness in American education is bringing to Wellesley a student body each year more nearly ready on entrance for the scholar's idea of 'higher education.' . . . (This) ought to lead in the near future to a major, inclusive examination by the faculty of the fundamental purposes of the College and of the best ways in which the academic, residential, and extracurricular arrangements may contribute to them. . . ." The hope was expressed that such a review would involve directly a large majority of the faculty, cutting across department lines to examine the total program, winter and summer. In 1960 this represented the view of many of the faculty, which, persisting, led to a series of informal discussions of interested members of the Academic Council in the spring of 1962 to exchange views about the educational programs of the College. While these meetings revealed no wide dissatisfactions with the opportunities available for the students, they confirmed the existence of interest in considering various new or alternate ways of doing and led to a decision to elect a special committee to study and report on education at Wellesley.

The Educational Review Committee, elected by the Academic Council in May 1962, chaired initially by the Dean and then by Mrs. Ellen Haring, Professor of Philosophy, met at least weekly throughout 1962-63 and 1963-64, held meetings on various topics with faculty colleagues, students, and experts invited to the College, read widely in the literature of higher education, asked themselves hard questions, reflected much. I was privileged to sit with the Committee and can attest with gratitude for Wellesley to their seriousness, persistence, and the scope of their thinking. The membership included eleven people with diverse points of view and ways of thinking from ten different disciplines: Astronomy, Biblical History, Chemistry, Economics, English, History, Latin, Music, Philosophy, Political Science. In January 1964 the Committee reported to the Academic Council; in June, after almost weekly discussion meetings attended by an average of more than one hundred members, the Council adopted many but not all of the proposals by the requisite two-thirds majority, to take effect in 1965-66.

The changes will affect ways of doing, not the basic purpose of the College. They are intended to strengthen the breadth and depth of the program in the liberal arts and sciences, not to evade their demands; to provide opportunity for the student to work closely with mature scholars, to become acquainted with masterpieces in several fields, and to experience a variety of ways of learning which should be useful to the on-going self-education of women whether in graduate school or carried on informally at home.

The following summary is excerpted directly from the various proposals approved by the Academic Council. Each student by the time she receives the Bachelor of Arts degree shall have demonstrated either through course work at Wellesley or by meeting exemption requirements that she can use English, both in speaking and writing, in a clear, orderly way and that she can use at least one foreign language; that she has some acquaintance with the major stands of her intellectual and moral heritage, stemming from the Biblical tradition and the Greek tradition, and expressed in the history and in great works of literature, art, music, and philosophy of the West; has some acquaintance with the objective study of human behavior and contemporary social institutions and some understanding of the relationships among men in economic and political contexts; and has some understanding of the natural world in which she lives, of the ways in which knowledge of the physical and biological environment is gained, and of the conceptual structures through which it is expressed.

Furthermore, it was agreed that as an upperclassman she should give some attention to an area of general concern presented in lectures offered from a non-departmental view, should experience the process of truly independent learning in her area of concentration, and should achieve some learning in depth by taking a structured, sequential program in a discipline or related set of disciplines and by passing at the end of her senior year an examination in her major field.

To assist the student in achieving this set of goals, the following specific directives were adopted. Unless exempted by demonstrating that she already has reasonable competence, each student will elect enough work in a foreign language to show proficiency in its use, and:

3 hours in English Composition in the first year.

3 hours in a lecture course intended primarily for freshmen, either selected works of Greek poetry, history, and philosophy or some other theme approved hereafter by the faculty.

6 hours in the Old and New Testaments in the second year.

6 hours in literature (English or foreign).

6 hours in another literature and/or art, and/or music.

6 hours in history and/or philosophy.

9 hours in economics, political science, psychology, sociology and anthropology, with at least 6 hours in one department and at least 3 in another.

12 hours in astronomy, biology, chemistry, geology, mathematics, physics, the history of science.

3 hours in an upper-class lecture course, with an option of another 3 hours, designed from a non-departmental view to introduce a subject of general importance outside of the student's area of concentration.

At least 45 hours in one area of concentration which will include 3 hours of independent study, critical, creative, or exploratory, normally in the third year, and 3 or 6 hours of concentrated preparation in the fourth year for the Senior Major Examination, unless the student is in a special Honors Program.

Heretofore, 114 hours and preparation for a general Examination were required. Hereafter, 120 hours including the preparation for the Senior Major Examination will be required. Only one change was made in the departments which offer majors; for the immediate future, there will be no major in geography.

A change in the calendar was adopted whereby the academic year will be lengthened by approximately one week and will be divided into three terms, from mid-September to mid-December, from early January to early April, and from late April to early June. Each student will carry four courses or their equivalent in Terms I and II, two in Term III. The schedule will provide for 70-minute periods or optional 60-minute periods for classes meeting twice a week in Terms I and II, (four times a week in Term III), with additional 50-minute periods for classes which need extra meetings. The purposes of the change are to end the unsatisfactory interruption caused by the Christmas vacation shortly before the examination period in the traditional first semester, to permit more variety of ways of learning during the academic year, and to lessen the number of academic interests which the student must maintain at one time without lessening the opportunity for breadth which the five course program gives.

These decisions having been made, the immediate future seems clear. 1964-65 will be a year of departmental, interdepartmental, and college planning to revise courses and make adjustments for the new requirements and the new calendar. 1965-66 will begin to test the changes.

There is much unfinished business. Many of the large educational issues discussed by the Committee or raised in the Council are unresolved. The faculty has already called for another special committee to review and make recommendations about Honors Programs. I hope that the new Term III can be used to provide opportunity for practice teaching for some interested students who enter with advanced placement or who take a special summer course at Wellesley so that they can graduate in four years with teacher certification and without curtailing their liberal studies.

Increasing numbers among us are concerned by the minimal use of the campus in the summer for educational purposes. A total plan for a summer program which is educationally useful and economically practical is not likely to be created at Wellesley in vacuo and then suddenly be implemented. The recommendation, therefore, is that the trustees underwrite the costs for an experimental period of any specific courses for undergraduate students which the Academic Council approves for credit and which can be offered without jeopardy to the winter program, and encourage, also, the development of programs for adults. This would provide an opportunity to see if enough valid uses of the campus during the summer develop to support a continuing and useful program. Linked to summer use of the campus could be intensive courses for undergraduate students permitting them to give undivided attention to a specific piece of research, experimental courses in a field of special interest to a member of the faculty, opportunity for students to advance more rapidly in the study of selected foreign languages, and various short-term adult seminars.

A summer program at Wellesley might also provide a means whereby more of the students who enter college with credit for Advanced Placement study could graduate early or, in certain disciplines, could combine the bachelor's and master's degrees within four calendar years, or at least could include some graduate work. This is not a suggestion that the broadly liberal program leading to the Bachelor of Arts degree be weakened. Students who already have on entrance 18 credits toward the degree could, by studying at Wellesley six or eight weeks in each of two summers, complete an integrated, structured four-year course leading to the liberal bachelor's degree and either a Master of Arts in Teaching degree or the first year of graduate study. Students who enter with 12 college credits could accomplish the same result by the August following their June Commencement, if they should enroll in an integrated winter and summer program under the control of the Wellesley faculty.

Programs like this would probably not be in the interests of the majority of students, nor could they be offered by many departments. However, they might be valuable and feasible for some students in some departments, or in divisions should they develop, especially in fields in which there is a need for well-prepared secondary school teachers, or in which graduate departments of leading universities agree in principle to stand ready to accept cordially and with full credit qualified students from such a program at Wellesley. Obviously, master's degree programs which cannot provide easy access to further graduate study or to professional employment appropriate to the high ability of Wellesley's students should not be offered. Nor should they be offered unless the College can afford the books and equipment necessary to advanced work in the selected fields and can be assured that the faculty in these fields will not neglect their freshmen and sophomores. Once the major tasks consequent to the new curriculum and calendar are cared for, I hope that two or three selected departments may be invited to experiment with summer study and, perhaps, master's degree programs along these lines. Also, in selected departments where conditions are favorable and the younger students will not be ignored, master's programs for women who have been away from formal study for some years might be developed, similar to the pilot program now being conducted in the Chemistry department.

Admission. College Board Examination scores are significant as rough indicators of achievement and potential but are not by themselves sufficient guides to selection when most of the applicants score in the upper ranges. So the Board of Admission reviews carefully the objective records of candidates for admission and also looks for evidence of individual integrity, intellectual vigor, and earnestness. For the class as a whole it seeks a diversity of special talents and interests.

The pattern of applications and acceptances has shown little change in the last four years. Each year about one-third of some 1900-2100 completed applications have had favorable action, and about 68 to 70 percent of the accepted candidates have entered. In laymen's terms this translates into unusual opportunity for the College to be selective. There have been slight variations in the geographical distribution of students from year to year, but the effective intention of having a geographic cross-section continues. The percent of the entering class whose mothers or grandmothers attended Wellesley, higher than a decade ago, has in these years held at 15 to 16 percent. As in the past, daughters of alumnae have been given preference when choice among candidates had to be made and other factors were comparable, and, as in the past, their average records in college have been very good indeed.

The number of applicants under the Early Decision Plan has varied more, but not markedly. Also, there is some indication that cultural backgrounds are more diverse than in earlier years, probably because of the scholarship funds now available for entering students, but the large majority of applicants, regardless of economic status, continue to come from homes where learning is encouraged.

The changes which are clearly evident during the last four years are in the higher quality of preparatory work in secondary schools; the increased number of students who enter with 18 to 20 units of school study instead of the traditional 16 units, or who are ready for advanced placement in college courses, or have earned Advanced Placement college credits; the larger number of schools from which applicants come (in the last two years among the applicants were representatives of the first graduating class of 600 new schools); a mounting effort on the part of the Office of Admission acting alone and also as a member of The Cooperative Program for Educational Opportunity to seek out and encourage able and earnest youth from underprivileged backgrounds; and the rising load of correspondence with students, parents, and schools which somehow the Office must handle — in each of the last two years it replied to more than 16,000 letters which required individual consideration.

The Early Decision Plan, first used in 1959, has proved sound for Wellesley. In each class the students who entered through it have on the whole made superior academic and community records. Moreover, they and their counterparts in other colleges have helped to reduce the time lost to education in schools and colleges when school teachers have to prepare multiple records and recommendations for, and college teachers have to study them from, students who could have been assured of admission to their preferred college early in the last year of school. It helps no one and advances no learning to study the credentials of an applicant who is sure not to attend one's institution. Multiple applications are necessary for most students, because of the existing uncertainties about admission and because many excellent students cannot have a basis on which to make a sound single choice of their preferred college at the start of the senior year of school. But insofar as multiple applications can be reduced constructively, everyone benefits — the school, the college, and the students who apply to several institutions and who earnestly hope that Boards of Admission will have the time to give full consideration to their records. Because of the success at Wellesley of the Early Decision Plan, the Board of Admission announced this year that hereafter it will not necessarily limit Early Decision admissions to one-third or less of the entering class. How many more will apply and can qualify for early decision remains to be seen.

Like other colleges, Wellesley has benefited from the Advanced Placement Program which has encouraged thorough work among many pupils whose schools formerly could not provide sufficiently challenging courses for the ablest pupils. Also like other colleges, Wellesley has been experimenting with how best to recognize and build on students' achievements through these Advanced Placement courses in school. Wellesley's current position, adopted in 1962-63, is to separate consideration of advanced placement from consideration of college credit. Placement in more advanced courses is arranged in all departments for students whose earlier work warrants it, whether that work was in an Advanced Placement course or in a small school with unusually high standards (many of which do not offer formal Advanced Placement programs), or through private study. Credit toward the Wellesley degree is possible if the student makes an honor grade (4 or 5) on an Advanced Placement examination, but only 6 hours of credit are given automatically for such grades. Additional college credit is possible after an Advanced Placement honor record has been validated by passing at Wellesley at a grade of C or better a successive course in the subject. Further developments in the Advanced Placement program and in its impact on college courses and degree requirements are to be expected. They should be the object of frequent review in this period of changing academic standards.

The recent development of televised courses will probably soon require colleges like Wellesley to decide how educationally valuable they consider large classes in the various disciplines to be, whether taught "live" or by television, and to what extent admission and degree requirements may be met simply by passing examinations. While recognizing the enormous value of having excellent lectures and demonstrations reach large numbers of people economically, as of now I share with many others concern lest such lectures will be insufficiently challenging or informative for the able student, because they have to be addressed to an average viewer. Also, I share concern lest training in clarity of independent thinking and expression and in developing one's own methodological tools through guided individual experience may suffer, if the young student and the mature teacher cannot confront each other directly in much of the educational program. Therefore, as of now, I think the Wellesley faculty is wise to expect credits for admission to be earned through traditional methods and to limit the amount of credit which may be earned in college courses which are not closely interwoven with research or with frequent exposition by the student orally and in writing.

In spite of the admirable developments in secondary education in the past decade, I find myself questioning time and again whether students and the nation are best served by enriching curriculums to retain in the schools because of chronological age the truly able students who are eager and ready to do college work, especially women students. Perhaps we Americans have indulged too long in a self-conscious hangover from the useful and important nineteenth century drive for equality of treatment of female with male students. Perhaps we should now give more weight in our thinking to the average age of readiness of each sex for successive stages of academic work.

Everyone knows that ordinarily girls mature more rapidly than boys and often do better in school work in their early years. Observation suggests that women who are younger than average on entering college are more likely to stay through to graduation; are more likely to date undergraduate men who are at similar stages of intellectual development (and so perhaps to marry men with a life expectancy closer to their own?); are more likely to graduate and even to have some advanced study or practical job experience prior to marriage and the child-rearing years. Healthy women wish to be wives and mothers; those with unusual natural ability wish also to use their talents in some special field as individual human beings. The further such women can go in their liberal education and specialized training before marrying at a usual age, the greater is the likelihood of their achieving a number of their lifetime goals amid the diversity of the demands which lie ahead of them. Schools and colleges might find it a hardship to lose their ablest and most mature students who are useful in setting the tone of an educational community. They would have fewer brilliant records among their seniors and recent graduates with which to impress school boards, legislators, trustees, and donors. They would have to forego the satisfaction of upgrading curriculums, and colleges might have to adjust some residential and social arrangements for the younger students. Nevertheless, some human beings, and society, might gain if age fifteen or sixteen should become the accepted age of college entrance for all gifted young women, not only for the occasional individual who insists on speeding ahead and in consequence is likely to suffer from feeling out of step.

Financial Aid. The total amount of financial aid to students from all sources in gifts, loans, and work guarantees was $420,799 in 1960-61; in 1963-64, $518,372. The major increase in awards came from college funds — an essential increase consequent to the increase in the inclusive fee for 1961-62 from $2200 to $2500.

Twice in the four years the amount awarded in loans rose. The first increase in 1961-62 resulted from a new policy adopted with the cordial cooperation of the invaluable Students' Aid Society. Replacing a pattern of offering full gifts to freshmen and then selecting from among returning students those who would be offered gift, or gift and loan, or loan only, the new policy combined gift and loan in a fixed proportion for students of all four classes. The purposes were to lessen what had become a time-consuming and costly task of deciding on the type of aid for each student, and to include entering students in the loan program rather than to give the benefit of full gifts always to the least tested, newest members. At the same time the College arranged to convert the loans to gifts retroactively at the rate of twenty-five percent conversion for each year directly following graduation from Wellesley which was devoted to teaching on any level in American public or private schools or colleges, and also for each year of graduate study within a stated time provided it was followed by teaching.

The second increase in the use of loans came in 1963-64 after the College accepted the responsibility of distributing government loan funds made available under the National Defense Education Act. Earlier it had not applied for such funds because of the requirement that students make a "disclaimer affidavit," the precise meaning and impact of which were not clear. The loyalty oath, also required, was not the problem. When the Congress repealed the requirement of a "disclaimer affidavit," Wellesley applied for loan funds. Only $18,000 in National Defense loans were needed in this first year, primarily for students with relatively weak records, for short-term emergencies, and to help a few married students.

Further data on financial aid appear in the "Statistical Reports."

Looking ahead, we realize that the College's endowed scholarship funds, now amounting to $6,250,334, should be enlarged by $2,000,000. The increase in the fee for 1964-65 to $2800 will require the expenditure of approximately $100,000 more than in 1963-64 for financial aid in order to provide worthy returning students with renewals in the amount of their need and to give the entering class the customary proportion of aid. Named scholarship funds and gifts designated for the general scholarship fund should once more be among the list of needs and should be called to the attention of friends. Also, in the near future it would be desirable to review the proportion of loan to gift assigned in each class, with the idea of increasing loans in the first year and decreasing them in the junior year when students have fully proved their ability and their continuing interest in a college education.

Self-help. Work guarantees and loans, both of which are used toward fees, are not the only ways in which the students help to support themselves. More than one-fourth of them registered each year with the Placement Office in order to hear of opportunities for term-time employment and in each year filled from 1,000 to 1,400 job-calls. Exact statistics cannot be developed, because not all students report their earnings or their repetitive returns to jobs initially found for them by the Placement Office. Winter earnings among those who reported rose from about $29,000 in 1960-61 to $40,000 in 1963-64, an increase which represents at least in part the increase in minimum legal wages. Seniors earn about one-half of the total; freshmen earn very little, and, indeed, should not be encouraged to try to earn much in their initial year of adjustment to college demands. Work on campus in the relatively lucrative agencies assigned by the Placement Officer or in an academic department or college office is generally preferred to work off campus which requires travel-time, but hundreds of townspeople as well as faculty members report with much satisfaction the competence of students in child-care work.

About one-fourth of the student body went each year to the Placement Office to discuss summer plans, asking about jobs to earn money, about jobs to see a region new to the applicant or to try a field of possible future career interest, asking about summer schools and voluntary service activities, asking for help on how to plan. In addition to a wide diversity of worthwhile use of the summer months, they reported summer earnings totaling $359,291 in 1960 and rising to $468,831 in 1963.

Undergraduate Life. The students continue to be unusually able and to be serious about themselves, their studies, and the issues of the times. Contrary to the typical magazine image of youth, each year many first-rate freshmen and sophomores are troubled by shyness and self-doubt through which they struggle toward maturity, as have been all the generations before them. Most juniors find some resolution to many of their questions as they find themselves securely established with a group of friends at Wellesley and elsewhere, with demanding and exciting courses in an area of special interest to them, with some decisions about values, beliefs and standards clearly taken, at least for the time being, and with familiar ways through which to participate in activities which they have found worthwhile. Many seniors, facing what appears to be an unstructured future, question their abilities once again as they wonder if there is to be a worthwhile place and purpose ahead for them. Those who have made a serious commitment to scholarship, a profession, or an art, and/or to a man with whom they plan to share their life are fortunate; those who merely escape to graduate school to avoid independence or enter marriage carelessly are to be pitied. The largest group falls into neither category, and for these seniors we should find more ways, not to remove the problem of choice nor to deny its existence, but to assist them to see it for what it is, another step in the process of growth which if they look back has been for them painful at moments but on the whole good, so that, as they look ahead, they have reason to go forward with expectant hope and eager will.

More than seventy-five percent of each entering class in recent years has entered the senior year. So the proportion of seniors to freshmen is higher than in many institutions, which is good, of course. It suggests a serious interest in learning and enjoyment of life in the College. However, it helps to create some residential problems which merit study. Social regulations which are relatively liberal for freshmen now seem restrictive to many seniors. In part, disenchantment with group living has occurred. In part, uncertainty about the future finds release in complaints about the present. In part, there is the natural wish to have something new. For some students, it is the age-old cry for freedom coupled with awareness that most of the existing rules would be quite satisfactory if set individually rather than collectively, and also with recollection of summers spent away from home or institutional controls and where transportation is better than in the Town of Wellesley.

My impression is that responsible students, who constitute the large majority, are groping for a new formula or revised pattern of residential life which will offer more gradations of personal independence across the four years, without undercutting either the encouragement to serious academic work and the concept of personal and community moral responsibility which have marked Wellesley or the institution's obligation to provide a frame of reference. My expectant hope is that together we can find a satisfactory pattern for these changing times, though not for the unhappy few who in spite of ability and opportunity seem to dwell in self-limiting anger wherever they are.

Space does not permit recounting the contributions which many students have made to the life of the college community through their many organizations and their individual efforts. Space must permit saying that as they have by their actions strengthened this College so also have they strengthened their likelihood of being affirmative forces in the nation and world.

Buildings, Grounds, and Equipment

Faculty Housing and the Wellesley College Club. Additions to faculty housing since 1959 have provided Wellesley with the opportunity once again to be a residential community. In 1959-60 most of the younger faculty commuted from some distance from the Town of Wellesley; in 1963-64 a majority in every rank of full-time members in active service lived in Wellesley or close by: professors — 92%, associate professors — 78%, assistant professors — 60%, instructors — 80%, lecturers — 87%. Fifty-nine per cent of the full-time faculty in active service lived in college housing; another nineteen percent lived elsewhere in the Town of Wellesley or equally close to the campus in nearby townships. The commuting full-time faculty had declined to 22%. In only two departments were the majority of the members resident outside of Wellesley.

The persisting myth among students that "most of the faculty live in Cambridge" lost ground, and complaints from students that their faculty seemed ignorant of coming events at Wellesley virtually ceased. It is fact that ten percent of the full-time faculty lived in Cambridge in 1963-64, most of them assistant professors and instructors (20% of the assistant professors; 13% of the instructors). This is troubling, as is the fact that the lowest percent of resident faculty is among the assistant professors, because it is from this rank that the College should expect to gain its next group of tenure members. If ever the senior faculty contains more than 25% who are commuters from a distance, and especially if many of them come from a great university center, the orientation of the faculty toward an undergraduate, residential college could be critically weakened. Faculty and trustees should be aware and watchful in this regard, even as they take satisfaction in the markedly improved situation resulting from increased college housing.

Between July 1960 and July 1964 the addition of 19 apartments in Horton House, McAfee Hall, and Homestead, of 10 attached houses on Weston Terrace, and 5 separate houses in the Town brought the available housing to 61 apartments and 22 houses. Two other houses in town owned by the College were sold to members of the faculty on convenient terms made possible by the imaginative Leeds Wheeler Family Fund, and another two houses were built by members under the Home Construction Plan adopted by the trustees in 1961-62. The results of the housing program have been invaluable to the College. If in the future more or different kinds of housing should be desired, the College should, in its own interest, make every effort to provide them. Meanwhile, early consideration should be given to providing more assistance to the business officers to handle the new load which rentals and care of the increased faculty housing have created.

The importance to education at Wellesley of a place for a Faculty Club as well as of more faculty housing was emphasized in the last President's Report. In the fall of 1963 the Wellesley College Club was opened at the Washington Street entrance of the campus, the purpose having grown to include a place for returning alumnae, special visitors, and members of various staffs as well as the faculty. Use of the Club in the first year of operation exceeded expectations, especially in the faculty rooms at lunch time, in sponsored events for faculty or for alumnae, and in faculty use of the small rooms. One soon heard faculty, staff, and returning alumnae wondering how they ever managed without the new building. For the first time Wellesley had comfortable rooms with private baths for overnight visitors, a large, gracious room where a number of small groups could gather for their separate purposes or where the entire faculty could meet informally, and expandable areas suitable either for dining or for conferences. An excellent Manager and a Board of Governors, chaired by Mr. Robert G. Stone, Trustee, and representing trustees, alumnae, faculty and officers, handled admirably the myriad questions of a first year relating to rules, memberships, dues, and prices. This significant addition to the campus is owing to the interest of trustees and to various special gifts and bequests for all of which Wellesley is grateful, notably among them the bequest of Mrs. Francis E. Pope (Juliette Wall, Class of 1891), the gifts of Mr. and Mrs. Claude A. Wayne (Gladys Dowling, Class of 1913) and of Mrs. N. Cary Haywood (Charlotte Averill, Class of 1922) and a portion of the Ford Foundation's Incentive Grant.

Student Residence Halls. McAfee Hall, named for Wellesley's seventh President, was opened in the fall of 1961 with a ceremony in which Mildred McAfee Horton participated to the vast satisfaction of the whole community. Intended for 145 students, it completed very happily the residential triad begun in 1952. For the first time since 1881 all undergraduate students lived in large, four-class brick buildings. Now, only three years later, separate freshmen housing is a tale of ancient days.

No new student dormitory was, or is, expected to follow McAfee Hall in the foreseeable future, unless the College should decide to increase enrollment substantially. However, the growing necessity of restoring the four oldest dormitories, and the desirability of major improvements in Davis and Stone Halls have long been evident. In 1961 it seemed unlikely that the College could afford to act before the end of the decade, but the superb grant from the Ford Foundation and the generous response which it brought from Wellesley's friends made possible an earlier start. By September 1964 the first half of the Quadrangle program — the interior rebuilding and refurnishing of Beebe and Shafer Halls — should be completed, and the other two Quadrangle buildings are expected to be fully restored within the next two years. Expensive though this is, it costs only about one-fourth as much as new building and should provide fully adequate, durable accommodations in the familiar surroundings.

In the spring of 1964 extensive redesign and additions to the ground and main floors of Davis and Stone Halls were begun, after many planning sessions to incorporate ideas of trustees, residence staff, officers, and students. When the work is completed in, we hope, January 1965, each hall will accommodate another eleven students, which, together with a new, shared, main entrance and bell desk, should permit reducing each student's housework to the average across the campus. Much larger living rooms and the addition of quiet rooms, date rooms, and a shared penthouse study within the present structure, and the construction near the east side of Davis of two new dining rooms connected by a corridor and cafeteria counter to the main buildings will make these halls as adequate for contemporary student life as any hall at Wellesley, and in some respects superior. Also, operating expenses will be considerably lower when at last dining halls, kitchen, and service entry are on the same level. The noise of construction and the inconvenience for students and Heads of House of having to go to Bates and Freeman Halls for meals and to Oakwoods for living rooms during the first semester of 1964-65 are as unavoidable as they are regrettable. We count on the good sense of the students and their anticipation of the satisfying improvements to tide over a difficult interim, quite as much as we look to the help of alumnae and friends to finance the improvements.

A few good pictures or prints hang in the common rooms of the residence halls, but many of the paintings are more likely to depress the spirit than elevate taste, and vast expanses of bare wall are unfortunately usual. My hope is that a few friends of Wellesley will see a worthwhile project in improving this situation and that specially designated gifts will come to the College in order to provide happier surroundings. The quiet influence on one's aesthetic standards which can result from living with a beautiful object should not be forgotten.

Academic Buildings and Equipment. Since the enlargement of the Library and the superb gift of the Jewett Arts Center, the major need for improving academic structures has been in Founders and Green Halls. The time has come for action, now that the main lines of the curriculum for the immediate future have been clarified. Related disciplines should be located as near each other as possible, a small individual study should be provided for each full-time member where he may work alone or confer quietly with students, especially now that the curriculum is to encourage more independent and individual work, and some convenient gathering areas for faculty and students may be desirable. In some disciplines better space for modern equipment is imperative, and better lighting and ventilating systems are needed throughout. Developing an inclusive program with which an architect can work will require delegation to three or four members of the faculty of power to act in behalf of all members of the many departments concerned. This is important to do, because piecemeal, short-range changes in the interests of any one or two departments would be unjustifiably expensive and of dubious value to the College as a whole.

The preceding project has been held in abeyance, partly to await the outcome of long-term educational review, partly because of its complexity. Meanwhile, in 1962 a classroom was added to the Observatory enabling all work in Astronomy to be conducted in the same building; in 1962 and 1963 a few controlled-temperature rooms were provided for chemistry and the biological sciences; in 1963 a statistical laboratory was created in Green Hall for the use of the social and behavioral sciences, and much new scientific equipment was purchased from college funds and grants from the National Science Foundation. Finally, in the spring of 1964 provision was made for a data processing office in Green Hall which is expected in due course to accomplish more efficiently and economically the enormous addressing tasks of the College, to provide various fiscal reports and accounts, and later to serve a variety of administrative offices and, perhaps, academic departments.

The Grounds and Community Buildings. In the summer of 1961 part of the main road through the campus was relocated to skirt the east side of Norumbega Hill and the automobile road on the west side was removed, thereby ending a serious traffic hazard at the juncture of College Road, Tower Court Hill, and the Jewett Arts Center, and incidentally providing for pedestrians an oasis bounded by Norumbega Hill, the Library, and Tower Court Hill. Also, the main automobile entrance at Fiske Gate was closed to end the increasingly hazardous juncture of Central Street, Weston Road, and the college entrance, and to stop a trend among strangers of using the campus as a speedway in order to by-pass the town, with consequent risk especially to residents of Bates, Freeman, and McAfee Halls. The old North Road and an unsightly road cutting through the meadow were discontinued as economy measures. It is satisfying to report that the inclusive results have proved to be wholly sound from a view of safety, economy, and aesthetics.

Gradually as time and money permit, safe footpaths are being installed with handrails on steeply sloping walks, and exterior lighting is being improved. Several unsightly areas on the grounds have been made attractive and a few trees and flowering bushes have been planted, but much remains to be done if the campus is to retain its traditional beauty. Special gifts for this purpose would be most helpful. It is good to report that in 1963 the Hay Outdoor Theatre was carefully restored to its initial beauty and usefulness.

A major problem in recent years has been to determine the future of buildings vacated as new and superior structures have risen. In 1960 the Jewett Arts Center left the outgrown Music and Billings Halls vacant, and McAfee Hall was soon to replace Navy, Dower, and Homestead Houses. Disposition of these buildings has moved slowly. In 1962 Music Hall was converted to the Student Organization Center, thanks to gifts from parents, the James Foundation, and the Kresge Foundation. The dilapidated, uneconomic, and inconveniently located old kitchen of College Hall, which the students had been using as their Center, was razed. Old Billings Hall is being used as an interim storehouse until in 1965 the former building of the Lake Waban Laundry is to become available as a college warehouse. Then, again, Old Billings will be vacant. Navy House, a war-time women officers' headquarters moved to Wellesley in 1947 to provide temporary housing, was razed in 1963. Dower House was offered on a short-term basis as headquarters for the excellent Leadership Institute of the Overseas Education Fund of the League of Women Voters. Most of Homestead continues vacant. The future of these buildings and of three unusually large single houses is not easy to determine. Maintaining them takes money away from education; using them for unnecessary extras is even more expensive; and yet it is not easy to urge razing them so long as it seems possible that a significant use for them may arise.

During the period under review only one unforeseen change in the plant occurred. In the winter of 1962 the old crew house collapsed without warning. Demands on all sides for restoration led to a gay, superbly utilitarian new boat house in 1963 in place of the defunct crew house and the old skiff house which was close to collapse.

The major plant needs in the next few years, aside from the dormitory improvements, the revitalizing of Founders and Green Halls, and the possible development of more faculty housing, appear to be additional and costly updating of scientific equipment, changes in Pendleton Hall to permit physical scientists more easily to share their ideas, equipment, and journals, and further attention to the safety and beauty of the campus.

Alumnae, Friends, and the Wellesley Development Fund

The College received unprecedented support through gifts and bequests during the four years under review. Its gratefulness and its reasons for being grateful to alumnae and their relatives, to the Ford Foundation, and to other friends deserve the fullest expression. Their benefactions made possible much of the accomplishment recorded in this Report and many of the projects now in process.

Between July 1, 1960 and June 30, 1964 Wellesley College was given $13,807,974. As a result, the Faculty Salary Advancement Goal of $15,000,000, which stood at $5,457,692 on July 1, 1960, was fully achieved by June 30, 1964. In addition to this, a gift in May 1964 of $350,000 from Mr. and Mrs. Shelby Cullom Davis (Kathryn Waterman, 1928) in honor of her mother of the Class of 1897 established the Edith Stix Wasserman Foundation for Far Eastern Studies. This will enable the College to expand its offerings on the Far East by appointing a Professor of Far Eastern History to the first fully endowed Chair to be established here since 1938.

The major uses of these gifts and bequests were for faculty compensation and scholarly interests ($7,629,004), improvement and care of the physical plant ($2,213,864), scholarships and financial aid ($1,328,862), various educational programs and materials ($1,216,919), and to purchase annuities and life income agreements ($956,182).

Translated into evident impact on the campus, the gifts and bequests, together with the increased income when the inclusive fee was increased for 1961-62 from $2200 to $2500, resulted in:—

An increase in average compensation for professors of $2036; associate professors, $1485; assistant professors, $891; instructors, $859.

An increase in the annual financial aid budget for students of $97,573.

Plant improvements, chief among them: —

The Wellesley College Club
19 apartments and 15 houses for the faculty
Conversion of old Music Hall for student organizations
The Boathouse
Improved roads and footpaths

Educational gains, chief among them: —

A vastly enlarged Lecture Program
Much new scientific equipment
A statistical laboratory
More books

Support of a flourishing Alumnae Association and the reduction of the debt for Bates-Freeman Halls from $1,740,000 in 1952 to $174,000 (as of November 1964) and for McAfee Hall from $910,000 in 1961 to $520,000.

Some description of the sources of the gifts and bequests is illuminating. The Ford Foundation's incentive grant is mentioned first, because of its unique character in size, in purpose, and in impact. In September 1961 the Ford Foundation announced a major new program whereby it proposed to make substantial grants on a matching basis to certain privately supported liberal arts colleges. The grants were to be unrestricted, expendable grants to be used in whatever way each recipient institution thought would best advance its programs. Wellesley had the good fortune to be among the first eight colleges to be selected by the Ford Foundation. It was offered one dollar for every three dollars which it would receive from other sources between July 1, 1961 and June 30, 1964, up to a maximum grant of $2,000,000 from the Foundation. The impact of the encouragement which this gave to the trustees and officers of the College, who bear the burden of planning, spending, and saving so that Wellesley today and tomorrow can fulfill its high functions, was as invaluable as was its impact on the alumnae leaders on the Development Fund Committee, the Board of Dirctors of the Alumnae Association, and of Classes and Clubs across the country. The outpouring response to the challenge on the part of alumnae and friends was testimony to their belief in the worth and future of the College and their recognition of the contributions to the lives of alumnae which over its history the College had made.

Instead of needing the three years set by the Ford Foundation to qualify for the whole of its proffered $2,000,000, Wellesley's alumnae and friends met the challenge in one half the time — by December 31, 1963. But the alumnae knew that Wellesley's financial problems were not solved as of December, and they have persisted in working to strengthen the College.

The $2,000,000 from the Ford Foundation has been used in the following ways: Plant $1,304,680; Faculty Compensation $460,000; Books and Equipment $185,320; Scholarships $50,000. What cannot be listed conveniently is the impact of the grant on other giving and the consequent early accomplishment of foreseeable necessary actions. Two striking illustrations must suffice. Faculty compensation for 1964-65 has advanced to the level which in 1960-61 we feared we could not reach by 1965-66, and the Quadrangle Program and Stone-Davis improvements, hoped for at the end of the 1960's, are already in process.

Of the total gifts and bequests since July 1, 1960, the Ford Foundation alone contributed 14.4%. Alumnae gave most of the rest, through gifts 36.7% and through bequests 26%, and individual non-alumnae friends gave 7.7% through gifts and 10.6% through bequests. Stated in another way — gifts from all sources accounted for 63% of the total; bequests 37%. Alumnae gave 62.7% of the total gifts and bequests, and others gave 37.3%. In each year slightly more than 60% of all alumnae and more than 70% of the graduates contributed. All of this suggests the importance of annual alumnae support and of having alumnae and friends remember to write Wellesley in their wills to whatever extent is appropriate for them.

In each of the four years under review more than 15,000 individuals gave Wellesley College financial support. Though expression of thanks individually in these pages is not possible, there is room to express gladness that so many people have cared so much about a demanding liberal arts program for women in an institution which seeks to develop standards of ethics and taste as well as intellectual powers, that they have given of their substance to its ongoing strength. A record of Wellesley's largest donors is appended to this Report.

Membership in these years on the National Development Fund Committee included as chairman Mrs. Robert N. West of New York, 1959-63, followed by Mrs. Lewis Rumford II of Baltimore; for the Trustees, Mrs. Francis J. Wright of Columbus, Ohio; for Classes, Mrs. William H. McMaster of New York, followed by Mrs. John P. Swansen of Kenilworth, Illinois; for Clubs, Mrs. J. Philip Wernette of Ann Arbor, Michigan, followed by Mrs. Clemson N. Page of Gladwyne, Pennsylvania; for Geographical Representatives, Mrs. James E. Evans of Moylan, Pennsylvania, followed by Mrs. Jeff Montgomery of Houston, Texas; at large, Mrs. T. Edson Jewell, Jr. of Newton, Massachusetts, Mrs. Arthur M. Long of Evanston, Illinois, Mrs. Frank Seiberling, Jr., of North Liberty, Iowa, and Mrs. Harold F. Reindel of Essex Fells, New Jersey, and from the College four continuing officers.

Their imagination, determination, and enthusiasm gave superb direction to the whole program. Wellesley is grateful to all of them, for long working days at Wellesley, for travels and talks in many places, for organization work and correspondence carried on at home — is grateful, too, for their husbands' understanding support.

Thanks are due also and are gladly given to Mrs. David Gaiser, Chairman of the Bequest Committee; to Mr. Warren Claff, Chairman for 1961-64, and Mr. Sumner Babcock, incoming Chairman, and all the members of the Parents' Committee, newly established in 1961; to all the alumnae who served in these years as Regional and District Chairmen; and to the many Trustees who worked endless hours to help support Wellesley College.

Though legally a separate entity, in spirit the Alumnae Association is surely part of the College. This opportunity is seized, therefore, to express gratitude to Mrs. Walter W. Allen, President, 1958-61, and to Mrs. T. Edson Jewell, Jr., President, 1961-64, and to the other Directors of the Association in the period under review for their selfless efforts in advising, interpreting, and supporting the College. We look to continued oneness in purpose and stimulation through exchange of views with the Board of Directors and its incoming President, Mrs. E. Norman Staub.

Notes on Individuals

Three Trustees retired in June 1961 after long service: Dr. Palfrey Perkins, Chairman of the Board from 1947 to 1959, the Honorable Charles C. Cabot, Chairman of the Board from 1959 to 1961, each after eighteen years, and Professor Sirarpie der Nersessian, Faculty Trustee, after twelve years. A former member of the faculty, Miss der Nersessian brought to the Board long familiarity with the College and constant support of faculty interests. In his twelve years as Chairman, Dr. Perkins showed an ever forward-looking, liberal spirit. He believed in youth and in giving them opportunity. As Chairman he guided the deliberations of the Board and the Executive Committee with humor, selflessness, and tact. Mr. Cabot served as Chairman of the Committee on New Members from 1948 to 1957 and was a member of the Buildings and Grounds Committee and the Endowment Committee before becoming Chairman of the Board in 1961. His calm insistence on principle served the College well at several critical moments.

In 1962 Justice Harold H. Burton retired after eighteen years of service during which time he never missed a meeting except when the Supreme Court was in session. Dr. Myles P. Baker completed one term, and Mrs. E. Myles Standish, Alumnae Trustee, completed her stated term after devoted service to the College and the Alumnae Association and as Chairman of the Mayling Soong Foundation.

Another retirement occurred in June 1964 when Mr. O. Kelley Anderson completed eighteen years of service. Member of many committees, expert Chairman of the Finance Committee for fifteen years, and Vice Chairman of the Board from 1961 to 1964, Mr. Anderson has an ability to penetrate to the essential which made him an invaluable trustee. In the same year two alumnae trustees, Mrs. E. Wilaon Lyon and Mrs. Peter Macdonald, reached the mandatory limit of their terms. Thanks to a change in the electoral policy of the Alumnae Association, the Board had a happy excuse to elect each of them to a special term for 1964-65.

New trustees and new officers of the Board were elected in this period. Mr. John Quarles, formerly Chairman of the Executive Committee, became Chairman of the Board in 1961 and has since worked indefatigably and expertly in Wellesley's interests, developing quickly an unusual grasp of its needs and possibilities and a wide acquaintance with its personnel. In 1963 Mr. Robert G. Stone accepted the task of organizing and chairing a Board of Governors for the new Wellesley College Club, and in 1964 was also elected Vice Chairman of the Board and Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Elections of new members to the Board were: for 1961-67 Professor Germaine Bree, Faculty Trustee, Mr. Erwin D. Canham, and Mrs. Robert Nias West; for 1962-68 Mrs. Alf H. Gundersen, Alumnae Trustee, and Mr. George H. Kidder; for 1964-70 Mrs. James P. Hart, Alumnae Trustee, and Mr. Nelson J. Darling, Jr.

A number of administrative changes and faculty retirements occurred in the four years under review. In June 1961 Miss Ella Keats Whiting, Dean of the College and Professor of English, retired after thirty-three years at Wellesley. Her integrity, her capacity for objectivity, and her soundness in counsel led the Trustees to an unprecedented act, the conferral of an honorary LL.D. on her retirement. To succeed her, Miss Laura Bornholdt came from the University of Pennsylvania where she was Dean of Students. Unfortunately, in spite of her remarkable abilities, her activities were limited in these years by poor health and after a leave of absence she resigned as of June 1964. Miss Virginia Onderdonk, Professor of Philosophy, who had served as a Class Dean and had been elected by the faculty to all of their important committees, accepted appointment as Acting Dean for the arduous year of 1963-64 when major curriculum review was in process, and after outstanding service became Dean of the College. Miss Kathleen Elliott, Recorder, retired in June 1961 after thirty-five years of tireless and caring service. She was succeeded by Miss Gwenyth Rhome.

In August 1962 Miss Mary E. Chase, Vice President and Director of Admission, died of cancer after a long illness. She had served Wellesley for sixteen years. Her death, at the height of her powers, was a serious loss to the College and a cause of grief for vast numbers of friends, for she had strength and high standards and an unquenchable sense of fun. The College was fortunate in having as Associate Director of Admission Miss Barbara Clough, who as Acting Director quietly ran the Office of Admission during Miss Chase's illness. In January 1963 she became Director and has already established herself as a calm and effective administrator and as one who cares about the welfare of each applicant and the quality of Wellesley's student body.

Miss Virginia V. Sides, who came to Wellesley in 1955 as Assistant to the President, was appointed Administrative Vice President in January 1963. In this capacity she is an excellent spokesman for the College in many types of alumnae endeavors and in relations with government agencies as well as having general charge of all development programs. In 1962 Miss Jean Glasscock, Director of Publicity since 1946, added to her duties that of Coordinator of Special Events, providing a clearinghouse and arrangements center for a vastly expanded extracurricular program and imaginative ideas for faculty and student program planners. In 1963 Miss Lucetta Mowry, Professor of Biblical History, became Dean of the Class of 1965 for its last two years, and in 1964 Miss Claire Zimmerman, Associate Professor of Psychology, accepted a similar appointment for the Class of 1966. Two other major administrative changes occurred in 1963. Dr. Elizabeth Broyles, Resident Physician for thirty-eight years, retired after a possibly unparalleled record of effective health care, to be succeeded in 1963-64 by Dr. William A. Hall and in 1964-65 by Dr. Elizabeth Veeder. Also in 1963 Mr. Donald B. Height, formerly Business Manager, Assistant Treasurer and Controller and then Consultant on Funds, retired after twenty-five years of devoted service. He was succeeded as Controller in 1962 by Mr. Harry B. Jones.

In the last four years eighteen members of the faculty retired: in 1961, in addition to Miss Whiting, Miss Harriet Waterman, Professor of Zoology after thirty-seven years; Miss Mary L. Austin, Professor of Zoology and Miss Elizabeth Beall, Associate Professor of Physical Education after thirty-three years; Miss Grace E. Hawk, Katharine Lee Bates Professor of English, and Mrs. Roy S. Houck, Lecturer in Zoology after thirty-two years; Miss Anne C. Jones, Lecturer in French after eleven years.

In 1962 three more retirements occurred: Mrs. Hugh B. Killough, A. Barton Hepburn Professor of Economics after thirty-three years; Miss Elinor M. Schroeder, Associate Professor of Physical Education after thirty years, and Miss Magdalene Schindelin, Associate Professor of German after twenty-three years.

Five faculty retirements occurred in June 1963: Miss Agnes Abbot, retiring as Professor of Art after forty-two years; Miss Gladys K. McCosh, Professor of Zoology after forty-one years; Mr. Howard Hinners, Professor of Music after thirty-seven years; Miss Dorothy M. Robathan, Professor of Latin after thirty-two years; and Mr. Charles Kerby-Miller, Professor of English after twenty-five years.

In June 1964 Mrs. Tracy B. Mallory, Professor of Psychology, retired after thirty-seven years of service and Miss E. Elizabeth Jones, Stimson Professor of Zoology, after thirty years. Also in this year Miss Margaret M. Boyce, Research Librarian for Reference and Instruction, retired after twenty-five years at Wellesley.

The many people mentioned in these pages and the still larger number not mentioned by name because their continuing duties have been unchanged have brought Wellesley to a new pinnacle of useful strength. The College has reason to be grateful to its trustees, faculty, officers, students, alumnae, and to its friends among other individuals and Foundations who together achieved the record which is reported here.

Respectfully submitted,

Margaret Clapp
